the irony and humour regarding today's manipulative function of our consumer society and ethics are precise and indisputable ^__^

Fangirl: The stories of Calvin and Hobbes make me laugh so hard that I cry. My favorite cartoon ever! Wonderful!!

HeavyReader: Ah, Calvin and Hobbes. Is that this invoice Watterson's suggestion of childhood? His real recollections? I imagine Calvin will be happier if he had been homeschooled, yet I do not believe his bad mom may well deal with it. What are we to do with young children who may otherwise be raised by way of wolves, or during this case, tigers?

Marc Braun: Calvin and Hobbes is especially clever, lovely and sometimes funny. I myself find it very gratifying that that Calvin is a 6-12 month old with absolutely grown-up musings and put-backs. The jokes that concentrate on a six-year-old's obsessions, probably unlimited fantasy, unbound creativity for stupidity and destruction and loathing for women are totally wonderful. Those within which Calvin's ultimate statement or grumbling feels like it was once expressed through a 40-year-old's mind, to me are a cop-out, which I actually dislike.

Hazel: I completely love Calvin and Hobbes. This is often the most effective comedian strips ever written. Calvin and Hobbes will make you chortle each time.
