Description

Mortimer Mouse needs a new house -- a house that's not so cold, cramped, and dark. Where can he go? He sees a huge tree covered with twinkling lights. And next to the tree, a mouse-size house. And inside the house, a wee wooden manger just Mortimer's size. But statue people seem to already live there! One by one, Mortimer lugs and tugs the statues out of the house -- only to find them all put back in their places each evening! What is Mortimer to do?

It's not until he overhears a very special story that Mortimer realizes whose house he is sharing and where Mortimer himself belongs. It is the story of Christmas and the night the baby Jesus was born that warms Mortimer's heart in this magical holiday offering from award winners Karma Wilson and Jane Chapman.

Insightful reviews

Marcelle: This was my favorite from this year's pile of Christmas books. I love Wilson and Chapman and their expressive characters (like Bear and Mole and Badger), and maybe it's because we just finally rid our house of its rodent residents and I'm feeling more generous toward mice, but I found this to be a wonderful glimpse of Christmas magic.

Alvera: A fun Christmas story from the author of Bear Snores On and the like.

Kate Hastings: Mortimer the mouse is tired of his cold, dark hole and finds a perfect new place to sleep-- a tabletop nativity scene. Every night he removes all of the statues to make room, until he hears the Christmas story of Jesus being born in a stable because there was no room. He puts all the pieces back and prays for a new home... which appears in the form of a gingerbread house. Giggle. CUTE!

Heather C.: a superb preschool Christmas booklet with the cutest pictures. (This is Karma Wilson, of Under the Mistletoe, More, More, More, Endure Remains Up, etc. fame) I problem you to learn it with no tearing up on the end!

Mary: wonderful standpoint of a mouse's event with a nativity scene and Christmas. It says a while 2-6, yet there is an excessive amount of textual content on a few pages to carry a toddler's attention, in my opinion.

Faye: an enthralling story of a mouse who learns the genuine which means of Christmas.
